What are hives and angioedema?

Common allergic skin diseases that can produce abrupt swelling, redness, and itching include angioedema and hives (urticaria). If you're looking for therapy for angioedema hives in Fresno, it's crucial to realize that these conditions can develop quickly and could worsen if left untreated. While angioedema causes deeper swelling, frequently around the eyes, lips, hands, and throat, hives typically manifest as elevated, itchy welts on the skin. Angioedema can be dangerous in certain situations and need to be treated right away.

Typical Signs of Angioedema and Hives

Early symptom recognition can facilitate prompt treatment. Typical indicators consist of:

- Skin rashes or red, itching welts
- swelling beneath the skin, particularly on the lips, eyelids, and face
- Pain or burning in the afflicted areas

Angioedema and Hives Causes and Triggers in Fresno

Environmental and allergy factors cause hives and angioedema in a large number of Fresno residents.

Typical reasons consist of:

- Food allergies (dairy, shellfish, and nuts)
- Reactions to medications
- Insect stings or bites
- Seasonal allergies and pollen
- Temperature variations and stress

To properly manage symptoms and stop future outbreaks, it is essential to pinpoint the precise trigger.
